Bosnian coffee

Did you know that Bosnians and other Balkanians have been drinking coffee for a century before other Europeans? Oh yes! Ever since it was brought over by the Ottomans (15th or 16th centuries), coffee has been a part of daily life for people in most Balkan countries, especially Bosnia. Here, coffee is not just a drink. Coffee is a great part of the culture. In fact, kafendisanje or kafenisanje is a verb, in the literal sense meaning to do some “coffee-ing.” But really, the true meaning of “coffee-ing” is about sitting down to enjoy life, spending precious time together, or even taking a moment out of life just for you. In Bosnia, coffee is sometimes called kahva with an “h,” or kava with a “v,” but most times it’s just kafa. However, in cafes it might be called domaća kafa also, to differentiate it from an espresso.

Saudi Coffee

“Arabic coffee” is a general term that refers to the way coffee is prepared in many Arab countries throughout West Asia and North Africa. That said, there is a good deal of variation from place to place, including how the beans are roasted and what spices and flavorings are added. Arabic coffee is prepared on the stovetop in a special pot called a dallah, poured into a thermos, and served in a petite, handleless cup called finjaan. It often has a strong, bitter flavor that many people love. You might be surprised at how it differs from Western-style coffee, but after a few sips, you’ll be making this for all your guests.

It ranks among the finest Pai Mu Tan teas. The white tea got its name from the white peony flower, whose soft petals perfectly embody the tea's subtle aroma. Its gently feminine floral notes leave a lasting touch of sweet perfume on your palate. Steeped Pai Mu Tan peony leaves produce a very pale, almost colorless liquor. It also contains the lowest amount of caffeine and the highest amount of antioxidants of any tea.
